

5 San Diego Restaurants Every Surfer Should Try

In the need to fuel up before heading back out to the waves?

If there is one thing my hubby loves more than surfing (or spends more money on), it's eating out. Between trying to hit up the beach as much as possible and have careers and a life, time to cook at our house is definitely not a priority. Luckily we've stumbled across a few San Diego restaurants that cater to the surf guru as well as they serve their food.

Here are our recommendations for some great San Diego restaurants that will leave you full without ever making you feel like you left the beach.

1. Betty's Fish House

Located in Oceanside, CA, Betty's Fish House is a great restaurant with good food and an equally good beach vibe. Located just a block from the Oceanside pier, surfers and beach bums alike can easily walk to the restaurant from the beach. The pier creates a great point break for surfers and hosts many surf competitions throughout the year.

The upper deck and outdoor patio all offer uninterrupted ocean views, where spectators can watch the surf and share one of the many specialty house margaritas. In the first story several TVs play surf reels and highlights for those who wish to see surfing up close while taking shelter inside the restaurant.

Surf decor abounds, from the restrooms signs to the wall murals. Be sure to check out the decked out Baja Buggy, which is a great place for kids to play while they wait for their meal to arrive.